TRICK OR TREAT

HALLOWEEN might not be a big deal in Australia but for some of us, it's the perfect excuse to get dressed up and bring our alter egos out to party.

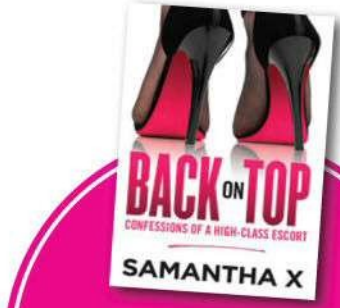

This month I got to live out my dark desires at Dracula's Cabaret in Melbourne and I loved it! What an incredible experience. Check out the shoot (p53) and an interview with me (p67) where I talk about my most memorable roleplaying experience...

Not only am I excited to be representing Black Label as the cover girl for the month, I am loving the mix of sexy and spooky content featured in this issue. From Game of Thrones, Mortal Kombat and Scooby Doo cosplay, to scary sex toys, robot sex dolls and the Miss Nude finals, this issue is a fun and sexy read.

So this Halloween, once you're done trick or treating, don't hang up your costume... wear it into the bedroom for the after party.

INTERVIEW

SCARLETT MOON WINS MISS NUDE

Hey Scarlett! Congratulations on winning Miss Nude 2018. How long have you been dancing?
Thank you! I don't really have a dance background but I definitely have a passion for it. I've been a full time show girl at The Crazy Horse in Adelaide for four years now and pole dancing for longer.

What inspired your mid-air performance?
I heard the song "Turbulence" by Steve Aoki on the radio one day and it really inspired me. I loved the idea of lots of bright colours and flashing lights coming together.

Do you hold any other titles?
I have a few other titles from the last three years of competitions. At Miss Nude (SA) last year, I won Best Butt and Pole Dancing Champion. At Miss Nude Australia last year I received Dance Champion. Last year I also won the title of Miss Erotica (SA) and some other titles in the competition. Toward the end of last year I also won Miss Erotic Entertainer of the year.

Outside of dancing, what are your other hobbies?
Honestly, dancing is my favourite hobby. I dance all the time! And holidaying... but does that count as a hobby?

Why not? What segment of the competition do you prefer?
My favourite part of the show is probably the shower show! I think it looks really sexy when the lighting hits your body and you're soaking wet. Plus it gives me the chance to flick my hair around. It's great fun.

Do you have any dancing idols?
As far as a dance idol goes I don't really have one in particular. I have watched so many amazing dancers in my work and I draw inspiration from all of them. When I see a dancer who has so much talent it pushes me to work harder and get that little bit better than I was before.

What's next for you?
My next career step is just to enjoy being Miss Nude Australia 2018 for the next 12 months and improve my skills as a performer.

How often do you train?
I train quite regularly, especially leading up to a competition. Some weeks I train five times a week. Now that I have the title I'll be training heaps more to bring up my abilities and live up the the expectations that the title comes with!

What makes you feel sexy on stage?
The music plays a big part in it. So does a sexy costume. I think a costume that looks great on your body is a massive part of feeling confident and sexy.

You had quite a cheer squad on the night! How important is your support network?
I have an amazing support network. It's been so important to me to have them there especially when I may feel stressed and overwhelmed or doubt my abilities as a entertainer. My support network are always there to cheer me up and keep me confident during a competition.

REVIEW

WOMANIZER.COM

IT looks like a souped up ear thermometre but this strange-looking device was designed to give you head of another variety. The Womanizer Plus Size sucks.

No, really. Instead of relying on vibrations, the Womanizer utilses suction, inducing intense orgasms within a disturbingly short amount of time. This toy does not fuck around.

The Womanizer works by lightly "sealing" itself over the clitoris and creating a gentle, pulsating, sucking motion similar to that of a skilled tongue. No grinding or thrusting required - just apply a little pressure and it's game on.

Previous versions of the Womanizer featured a much shorter handle, making it fine for solo play but not ideal for using during sex with a partner. The Plus Size features an extended handle, allowing for much easier use for play.

The Womanizer is waterproof and features 12 impulse modes that are adjusted at the push on a button. No batteries required; simply charge the Womanizer up via a USB cord.

The Womanizer doesn't come cheap but it's a must have for those who want amongst those who enjoy oral sex.

BACK ON TOP

"HE twisted off his artificial ear and laid it on the glass of the table, just before he ate my pussy out. I don't know what was worse: staring at his tragic plastic ear lying on the glass table like a dismal souvenir, or his eager head bobbing up and down between my legs, with the safety pin that was holding his floppy ear skin together rubbing against my thigh."

From shagging an earless man and Hollywood big names, to being flown first class around Australia, potentially giving a client nits and falling in love with a client, Samantha X's second novel, Back on Top, is a wild ride through the colourful life of this Australian journalist-cum-escort.

At the end of her first book, Hooked, Samantha X was left contemplating whether to continue escorting or hang up her stilettos.

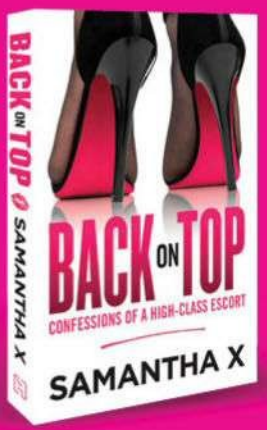

This sequel sees her heels still firmly strapped on while she turns her focus to creating her own escort agency, Samantha X Angels.

While the blurb of the book reads like Sex & the City meets Diary of a Call Girl, by the time you hit chapter 2 (Mr One-Ear) it's clear that Samantha's not afraid to go there with the shock factor.

Samantha says, "I have no issue telling the world what a dork I am. 'High class' is a really overused word. What does that even mean? We are all human. Event expensive escorts. We break wind! We get garlic breath! We get period pains!"

The book is an amazing look at the quirks of humans. In one story, Samantha tells us about a celebrity client she has who would always insist the hotel staff deliver a microwave to the room so he could heat up his McDonalds.

Samantha assures us there's a plan for a third book. We're not sure which direction her adventure will take her next but we're all ears.

10 TOP TRICKED-UP TREATS

1 FLESHLIGHT FREAKS ZOMBIE DILDO

Put the romance back in necromance with one of these dead dildos from Fleshlight. Ribbed for your pleasure, the Zombie dildo looks exactly like what we'd imagine a rotting (yet mysteriously still rock hard) cock to look like. Feel alive and restore your decaying sex life at au.fleshlight.com

2 THE CLAW

Ever wondered how it feels to be fingerbanged by Freddy Krueger? Neither. The Claw is a nightmarish metal scratcher that fits snugly on your finger, allowing you to give or receive sensual scratching that can range from a light tickle torture to the feeling of being clawed to death by an angry bear. Different strokes for different folks.

3 MAN OF SILICONE

4 THE SERPENT

Can't keep it in your pants? Cage your python with a high quality stainless steel male cock cage. This freaky number is called The Serpent and comes with an optional anti escape ring, "to ensure you cannot release your serpents venom". One man's Halloween horror is another man's average Tuesday.

5 BABY JESUS BUTTPLUG

Calling all sinners! The artisanal and adorably inappropriate blasphemous buttplug is designed to be swaddled… between your arse cheeks. Definitely not for those with unresolved religious guilt, although it may bring you closer to God. Can I get an Amen? Praise Jesus!.

WorldMags.net

6 DRAGONS TONGUE

Ever fantasised about being ravaged by a beast? Specifically, being penetrated by the menacing mouth of a Dragon? These Dragon tongue dildos that range from 6.5 inches to an eye-watering 14.4 inches, allowing you to live out all of your wildest dragon-fucking fantasies.

7 FLESHLIGHT: ZOMBIE MOUTH

Ignore what the zombie movies tell you, the walking dead don't want your brains… they're more interested in what's in your pants. Easily one of Fleshlight's ugliest toys, this decayed corpse mouth will haunt you long after you orgasm. Get your freak on at au.fleshlight.com

8 DEATH BY ORGASM

If you like your orgasms with a side of terror, get into the Halloween spirit by inviting a creepy crawler between the sheets. A 10 speed bullet nestles inside the rubbery scorpions shell, turning it into a 10 speed object of horrifying pleasure. If it couldn't get any more disturbing, the scorpion comes shipped in a mini coffin.

9 GAME OF MOANS

You know nothing until you have experienced the power that comes with wielding a big thick shaft. The Long Shaft dildo allows you to live out your medieval fantasies by getting up close and personal with Jon Snow's Valyrian steel sword. Take the sword up to its hilt and Winter won't be the only thing that's coming. geekysextoys.com

10 POKEMOAN

Become the ultimate Pokemoan master with these Pokemon-themed toys. You can choose a Charmander, Bulbasaur or a Squirtle-themed silicone dildo or a Pikachu buttplug. What we want to know is if the sex toys vibrate when a Pokemon is near. Use them wisely or you might end up bulba-sore. geekysextoys.com

MISS EROTICA SOUTH AUSTRALIA

Art of Tease hosted The 2017 South Australian leg of Miss Erotica Australia at the Land of Promise Hotel in Adelaide, and it was a saucy night of electrifying performances. Starlett Wildfire delivered a unique robotic performance; Kody King put on an Army show with a Barbie twist, and Mary Jane and Nikki Jay's military performances had their own tantalizing spin. Amity Adams vampire temptress act was a gory pleasure to witness, Ivy Winters Harley Quinn routine was mesmerising and Maddison Rose was a seductive showgirl while Candice Ray delivered us a sexy grim reaper devilish delight. With six of the most experienced industry judges, it was a tough one to pick a winner but Ivy Winters couldn't be beaten with her flawless body, beauty and smooth performance.
Special mention to the judging panel: Switch Master Raxxx, Switch SA, Lauren, Simply Seductive, David Shipp, Palace Girls Entertainment, Dante Rossi, Dante Entertainment, Sash De Bleu, Miss Erotica Australia 2015 and Anna Tripodi from Inspired Directions.
Winner: Ivy Winters 1st Runner Up: Candice Ray 2nd Runner Up: Nikki Jay

LUCIE BEE IS...

WorldMags.net

Mortal Kombat is probably my favourite video game. This costume is probably my favourite of all the many character designs that have been done for Sonya over the years. It screams, "I'm gonna kick your arse... but have a little fun along the way!" Who doesn't love a strong woman? I'd be lying if I said I didn't indulge in a little fantasy whenever I'm in costume, which lends itself to a little self pleasure. Plus, Sonya doesn't strike me as the kind of woman who likes to wait...

WorldMags.net

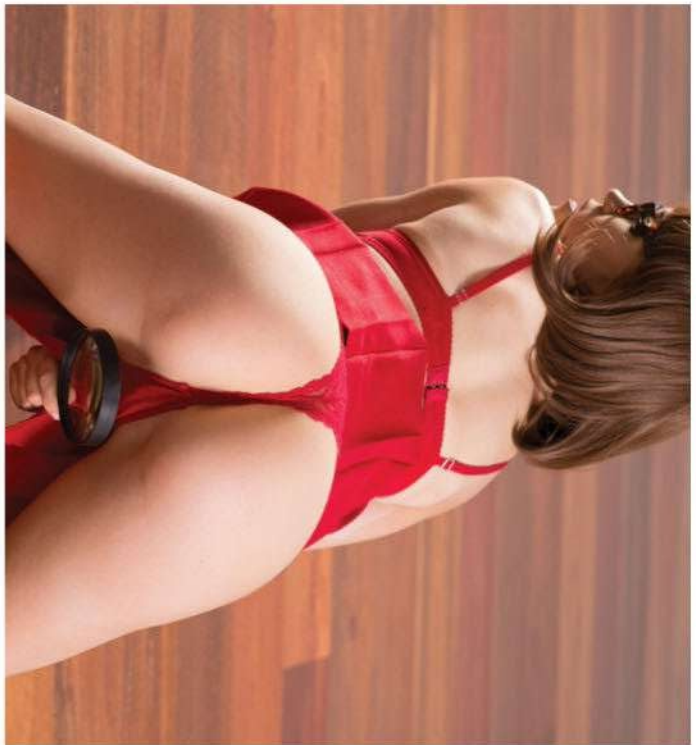

Jinkies! I have such a big thing for nerdy girls - besides just being one myself! Velma and I have a whole lot in common... including, I like to think, some of what we get up to outside the 'Mystery Machine'. While everyone was looking at Daphne, Velma was getting things done. I think a love of reading and research often lends itself to some... interesting material. This costume always give me a little confidence boost and it's one that plenty of people recognise and enjoy!

G.O.T. DAENERYS

If you're not watching Game of Thrones yet, get to a TV right now! I started off reading the books and fell in love with Daenerys. Little old school sci-fi/fantasy fan Lucie has a thing for dragons. She also has a thing for women who kick arse and take names. Though I'm not sure if I want to be one or be with one more. It's incredibly empowering to bring life to characters I admire. This costume is probably my favourite. It's rugged, rough and still incredibly sensual. And with friends like 'Geeky Sex Toys', I didn't lack an accessory!

TAKE 'SHROOMS, TALK TO GOD

DEPENDING on who you talk to, 'eating mushrooms' has two entirely different meanings. There's the delicious types – Swiss brown or shiitake – that are found on pizzas and in risottos, things of that nature. Then there's the other type: 'magic' mushrooms, the ones that hopeful dreadlocked kids have foraged since the '60s in search of mystical, mind-opening experiences. Counterculture leaders like Terence McKenna, who believed that mankind's intellectual evolution was spurred on by the consumption of psychedelic mushrooms (it's true – look up the 'stoned ape theory'), have maintained that 'shrooms aren't just another way to get off your face but are, in fact, tools for expanding one's horizons and getting in touch with the spiritual side of life. Sound like bullshit? Well buddy, think again.

Turns out the hippies may have been onto something all along, at least according to an ongoing study out of Johns Hopkins University in Maryland that's examining the effects of psilocybin on religious leaders from various faiths.

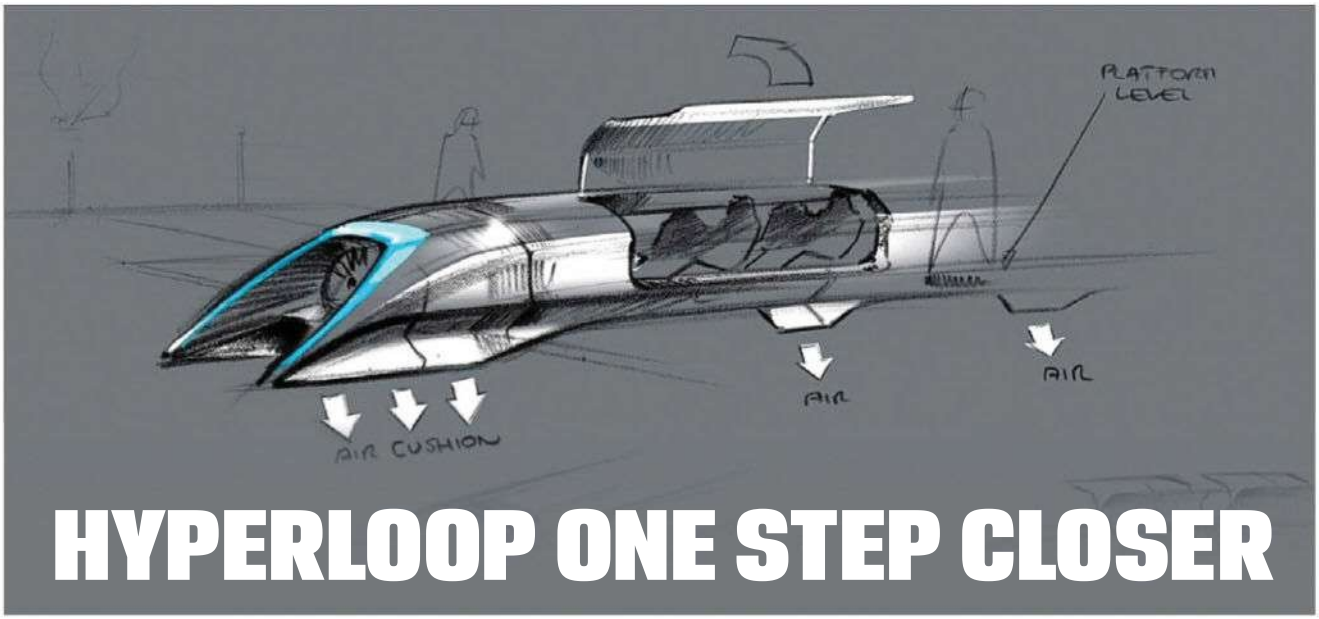

Included in the test are a rabbi, a priest, a Zen Buddhist monk and all the makings of a bad joke – but the researchers assured The Guardian that this study is anything but. "With psilocybin these profound mystical experiences are quite common. It seemed like a no-brainer that they might be of interest, if not valuable, to clergy," says Dr William Richards, a psychologist from Johns Hopkins involved in the study.

According to The Guardian, the sessions are taking place in a regular apartment living room – although, for a more authentic experience, we hope the organisers chuck up a few Hendrix posters and recruit a poncho-wearing dude named Storm to get the spiritual leaders into the groove. At this stage, we do know there will be a 'guide' present and, instead of putting on Jefferson Airplane and Jim Morrison, the organisers will play religious music to help the clergymen on their cosmic journey.

While there's a lot of support for the experiment, some (kill-joys) doubt the validity of the test. Ben Sessa, a clinical psychiatrist at Imperial College London, reckons the media should report on more 'rigorous' science. "Are you going to focus on the tie-dye and the dreads … or are you going to look at the cutting-edge neuroscience here?" he asked. We can answer that question for you right now, Ben, but you will be bitterly disappointed by the response.

HYPERLOOP ONE STEP CLOSER

IMAGINE stepping into a pneumatic tube, and zipping from one side of the country to the other in about 60 minutes – a trip that previously took half a day. The future of city-to-city transportation is now being tested for the first time, with Hyperloop One announcing in May that it successfully tested a full hyperloop.

Engineers managed to fire a magnetically levitating test sled through a near-vacuum, reaching 112km/h in just over five seconds. Soon the test sled will be replaced with a pod that people can sit in as they zip around the country. What's more, they'll be travelling at speeds of up to 1,000km/h.

"This is integrating all of the pieces," says Josh Giegel, Hyperloop One's engineering chief. "It's the first phase of a test program that will get us to a production unit."

The pods, made of aluminium and carbon fibre, are 8.5 metres long and resemble a bus that will one day be propelled through enormous vacuum tube networks, with close to zero air resistance. It would mean a journey from Washington DC to New York city centres would take just 50 minutes door to door, as opposed to half a day in a car.

The Hyperloop is another of Elon Musk's ideas, but one he decided he didn't have time to work on himself. Instead, groups around the world are racing to make his concept a reality. The test in the Nevada desert marks a major milestone in the next generation of transportation, potentially edging Hyperloop One ahead in the race to deliver this high-speed tubular transportation system.

XBOX GAMER LOSES TOP SCORE DUE TO MARRIAGE

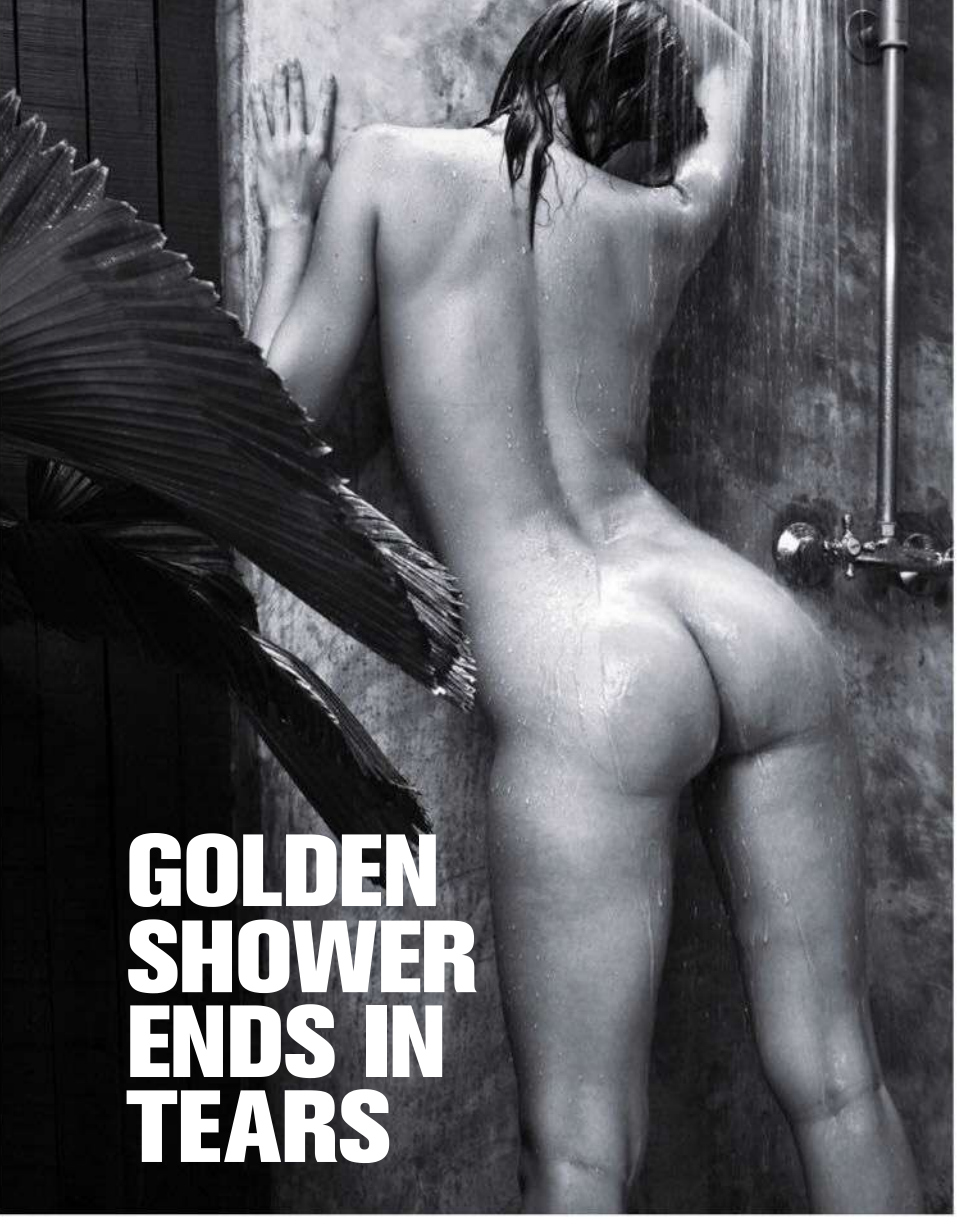

SOME hunt animals in forests and desert plains. Some hunt a different kind of game, in concrete jungles, where the nature reserves are bars filled with well-dressed men and women. Others still hunt Xbox achievements to boost their Gamerscore. Yeah, that last one is probably not as well known, but for serious gamers like Ray 'Stallion83' Cox, it's a serious pursuit involving countless hours of dedication along with a lifetime supply of Cheetos and Mountain Dew. For Cox, the effort's paid off: he's been at the top of the Xbox Gamerscore table (an international ranking among Xbox users) for 11 years. Until now.

The 'Stallion' has been tamed, it seems. He was finally dethroned by his closest rival, 'Smrnov', after he took time out of button-mashing to get hitched, according to reports from TrueAchievements.

Both gamers have scores above 1.5M, with Cox falling behind by about 20,000 points during his getaway with the new wife. Cox's score is already on the rise, but he has his work cut out for him if he wants to take back the top spot.

Surprisingly, Cox is completely unphased by losing his 11-year streak – we're assuming it wasn't the only long-running streak broken that weekend. In fact, he released a short video of Chris Farley, ripping his shirt off, licking his lips seductively, while sitting on a bed (we watched it so you don't have to). The caption on the video reads: "I've been too busy having all the sex." Sounds like he finally found something better than video games. Good for him.

GOLDEN SHOWER ENDS IN TEARS

MY mother always told me never to run with scissors, go to bed with wet hair, or let a chlamydia-infected stripper urinate on my face, and for good reason. One man's golden shower has ended in horrifying fashion after he went through with that last one.

The best man, partying with his mates on a bucks' night in Phuket, Thailand, copped an unexpected golden shower from the stripper (she'd been looking for a loo all night) – but things quickly turned sour when he started showing symptoms of a chlamydia infection.

"We were playing a bunch of games with the girls when one of them instructed me to lay down on the floor," he told reporters. "The next thing I know she was standing over me and she let rip and gave me a goldie. She pissed all over my face and in my eyes."

We're not sure if the golden shower is a common bucks' party showstopper, or if old mate got particularly unlucky, but either way it's probably a safe bet to wear goggles if you plan on getting pissed on you know, just in case.

"It caught me by complete surprise. I washed my face, but by the next day my eyes were all red and were extremely painful. The boys took me straight to a local hospital," he said.

"The bacteria that induce blindness are transmitted along with chlamydia," explains Dr Andrew J. Baxton at Bendigo Hospital.

"Put simply, trachoma is a bacterial eye infection, not unlike the common 'pink-eye' or conjunctivitis. Repeated reinfection, combined with the body's immune reaction, often has devastating consequences; eventually leading to scarring that causes the eyelid to turn inwards causing blindness."

I guess you could say he had a keen eye for her? Or maybe he just flew home on the red-eye.

MAN FINED FOR BRINGING FRIDGE ON TRAIN

A QUEENSLAND man has been fined nearly $200 for carrying a fridge on a commuter train. Honestly, the fine is a bit harsh. If anything, we think the legend should've won an award for the effort.

The man was caught on camera wheeling the fridge, using a dolly, over a rail pass to an elevator at a Brisbane station. He then rolled the fridge onto a platform and then, after a few attempts, managed to fit it onto a waiting train.

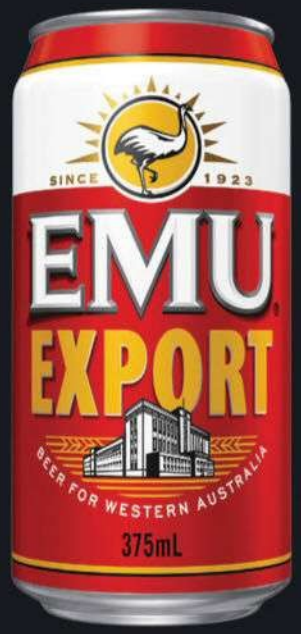

But moments later he can be seen backing out of the train, a security guard in tow, who then issued the man a $192 fine for bringing an oversized item onto the train. Unfortunately for him, he hadn't purchased a ticket and received another fine for fare evasion – double whammy, and the poor bloke was just trying to relocate his beer fridge!

"I hope he decided to book a removalist as we would encourage people to do; or call up one of his mates with a ute," Queensland Rail spokeswoman Justine Scarff told the Australian Broadcasting Corporation. "We obviously need to be mindful of other people travelling; trains are for people, they aren't for fridges and couches unfortunately," Scarff said.

PACKING THE ESSENTIALS

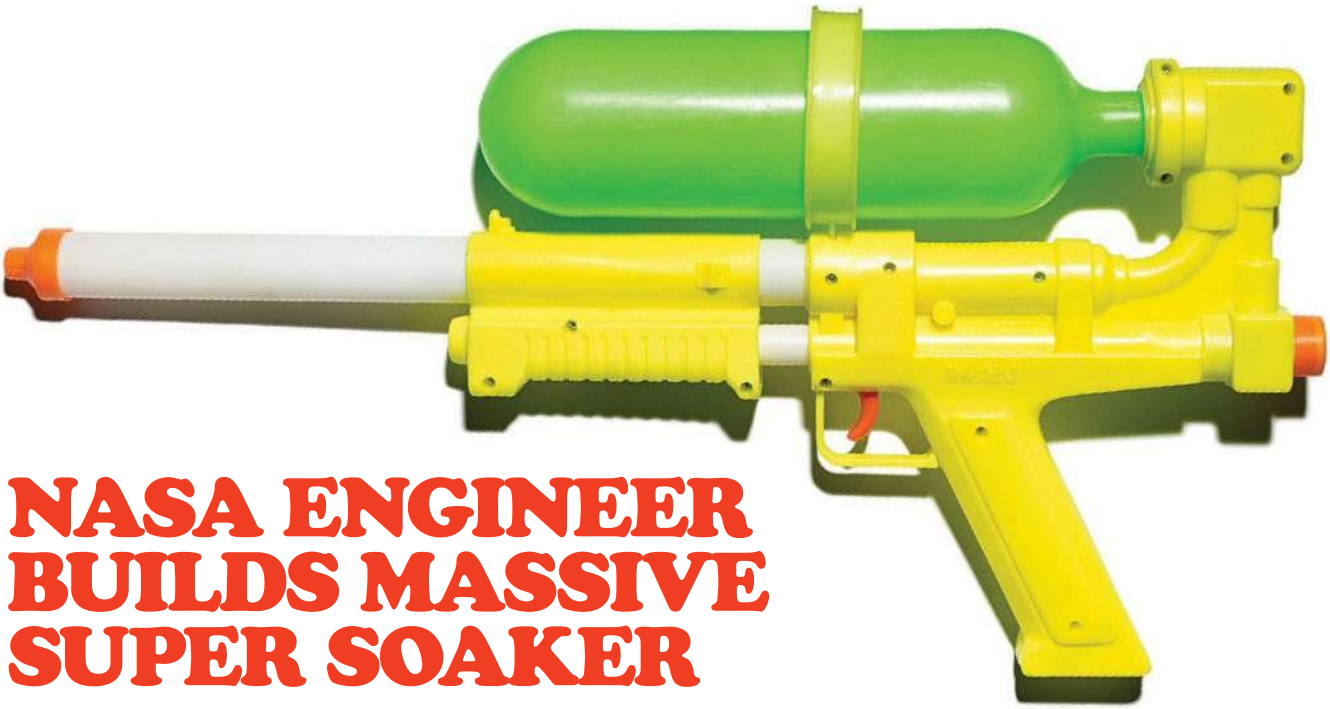

AN Australian man flying out of Melbourne Airport on a flight to Perth has taken the 'travel light' mantra to a whole new level, checking a single tinny of beer as his only piece of luggage.

The beer was an Emu Export Lager, and clearly the young bloke who hatched this genius plan couldn't bear to part with his lone tinny. The baggage handlers obviously appreciated his efforts as they carefully tagged and placed it ahead of the rest of the other passengers' luggage.

Dean, the passenger in question, told Unilad he wasn't sure the can would make it through the flight unscathed and was apparently fully prepared to file a lost baggage report with the airline if the beer 'mysteriously' went missing along the way. But due diligence was taken with the VIP cargo load, and the young man known only as 'Dean' was stoked to see that his precious tinny had made it through without suffering any damage.

"Sure enough there she was, alone on the carousel proudly making her way around. And there I was in my flanno and RMs to greet her. It was perfection," he says fondly.

Bystanders stood back and filmed the lone Emu Export Lager in awe as it made its way along the conveyor belt towards its proud owner. A true Aussie hero if ever we've known one. Onya Dean.

NASA ENGINEER BUILDS MASSIVE SUPER SOAKER

IT'S almost Super Soaker season again. You know, those handheld water pistols your bastard little cousin uses to squirt you in the face while you're napping on the couch? Well, next time he tries that shit, it's time to fight back – but this time,we're going in hard.

A former engineer from NASA has invented the ultimate Super Soaker, with enough power behind it to send any four-year-old menace flying through the back fence.

Mark Rober used the same basic principles of the original Super Soaker – pressurised air, pushed into a chamber of water (although he uses compressed nitrogen as opposed to oxygen) and released using a simple trigger mechanism. The end result is a water pistol of such unparalleled force that it's been officially declared the most powerful in the world by the Guinness Book of World Records.

What kind of force are we talking here? Water flies out of this beast at roughly 473km/h. In a video made by Rober, he can be seen slicing watermelons in two and effortlessly annihilating window panes. Just imagine what it could do to that cousin of yours.

You're probably thinking: "that's all well and good for Rober – he's a NASA engineer. I'm just some lowly schmuck." But Rober has you covered. He's provided the CAD files and a list of parts so you can replicate the seven-foot (210cm+) water pistol in all its cousin-crushing glory.

HOLY ORGY

THE Catholic church has been taking a massive beating lately. A few issues back we wrote about a randy Italian priest who kept a harem of mistresses, some of whom he regularly pimped out to other men (if you recall he used to carry around a suitcase full of dildos, bondage equipment and porn videos). Then there's our own Cardinal George Pell, the third-highest ranking man in the Church, who's been embroiled in child sex abuse allegations, forcing him to return to Australia and defend himself. And now, just in case the Vatican wasn't already in full-on crisis mode, another cardinal has been implicated in a gay orgy that took place in an apartment just outside the Holy City.

The apartment in question is apparently the residence of a high-ranking priest who serves as a secretary to Cardinal Francesco Coccopalmerio. Some nosy neighbours called the cops after seeing a number of "strange" visitors coming and going from the residence. The police raided the apartment and found drugs along with a group of men going at it in a good ol' fashioned gay orgy. Police arrested the priest and brought him in for questioning.

We're not even surprised and we're pretty sure no one else is either. The public has become so used to hearing sordid tales of priests sexual escapades (disturbingly often involving children) that jokes about men of God and their unsavoury predilections are as commonplace as jokes about blondes and their lack of common sense. "What's the problem with jokes about priests? Priests don't find them funny and nobody else thinks they're jokes."

Pope Francis was unsurprisingly annoyed by the news – well, "infuriated" was the term used by Il Fatto Quotidiano, the Italian newspaper that first reported on the priest party.

Have we finally reached the end of the line; will this be the final scandal to rock the Church? Can they finally move forward and do wholesome, churchy things like they're supposed to? We'd say there's a snowflake's chance in hell.

GWYNETH PALTROW WANTS TO SELL YOU MAGIC STICKERS

WHO says magic doesn't exist? Certainly not Gwyneth Paltrow. The actor-cum-inventor has just released a set of magic stickers that promote healing, thanks to magical properties. Yes, stickers – the same thing you use to encourage school children to do their work.

What is it that makes these stickers magic? Well, one would have to presume they're laced with Moon Juice Magic Dust, or some other magical distilling compound that can probably be found in the Harry Potter universe. Alas, the truth is closer to home. According to a report by Gizmodo, the stickers are "made with the same conductive carbon material NASA uses to line spacesuits so they can monitor an astronaut's vitals during wear." The stickers supposedly "rebalance the energy frequency in our bodies."

I know bullshit when I hear it – and this is a big, fresh steaming pile of deuce. But perhaps I'm just a cynic. How do I know the stickers, made from NASA spacesuit material, don't contain some sort of healing properties? Gizmodo called someone at NASA to do a quick fact check and got a very clear answer. Gizmodo's quote from a former NASA scientist, Mark Shelhamer, sums it up nicely: "Wow," Shelhamer told Gizmodo. "What a load of BS this is."

No, the stickers are not made of spacesuit material. (Even if they were, the suits do not contain healing properties anyway.)

Paltrow's website, Goop.com, quickly updated its site and removed any references to NASA and spacesuits. However the magical healing properties still stand. If you're still not sold on it, here's what the sticker ad says now, in an article called "Wearable Stickers that Promote Healing (Really!)": "Human bodies operate at an ideal energetic frequency, but everyday stresses and anxiety can throw off our internal balance, depleting our energy reserves and weakening our immune systems. Body Vibes stickers come pre-programmed to an ideal frequency, allowing them to target imbalances."

DOCTORS WARN AGAINST NEW TREND OF WOMEN PUTTING GLITTER IN THEIR VAGINA

PUTTING things in your vagina is fine, particularly if you're Martha Stewart and you're queef decorating (thank you, South Park) – just don't make a habit of inserting glitter-filled capsules into it, ladies.

Gynaecologists are warning against a strange new trend which sees women inserting glitter bombs into their lady bits, warning it could have potentially dangerous side effects.

The online retailer, which we will not name (don't go getting any birthday present ideas for your girlfriends, fellas), says the salami sparklers are "just enough to make your lover feel that your Yara (water-lady or little butterfly) is what all vaginas are supposed to look, feel and taste like; soft, sweet and magical!" Yeah, ok.

To be fair, we like vaginas – a lot – and they're already sparkly, so the addition of some foreign, plastic material that is potentially sharp doesn't bode well. People that know the vagina, albeit much more intimately than us are also warning against the trend.

"The vagina contains a delicate balance of good bacteria, which are there to protect it," Dr Vanessa Mackay, spokesperson for the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists (RCOG) told The Independent.

PORN ID CHECKS SET TO START IN APRIL 2018

THE UK has begun a nine-month countdown to introduce compulsory age checks for anyone viewing porn within the UK.

The requirement is part of the Digital Economy Act and aims to protect under-18s from viewing pornographic material on the internet. However, details of how the scheme will work are yet to be finalised.

"We are already working closely with DCMS [Department for Digital, Culture, Media & Sport] to ensure the effective implementation of the Act," a spokeswoman told the BBC.

The age-check requirement applies to any website or platform that provides pornography on a "commercial basis" to people in the UK. Any business that does not comply will be fined and blocked from using third-party payment services.

"Protecting children from exposure, including accidental exposure, to adult content is incredibly important, given the effect it can have on young people," said Will Gardner, chief executive of Childnet International.

However not everyone thinks that the April 2018 date is achievable.

"It seems to me to be a very premature date," commented Dr Victoria Nash, lead author of a report commissioned in the run-up to the law being drafted. "The idea you can get a regulatory body up and running in that timeframe seems extraordinary to me."

"And while I don't have a problem with asking these companies to act responsibly, I don't see it as a solution to stopping minors seeing pornography," continued Dr Nash, who then explained that the act does not address services like Twitter and Tumblr which contain hardcore pornography en masse. "There are many other platforms that provide pornographic material, but not on a commercial basis. In fact, one of the most popular platforms for under-18s is Tumblr, which has a massive porn culture, but isn't classified as 'commercial'."

PEOPLE POWER

LAST month Grand Theft Auto publisher Take-Two pissed off tens of thousands of fans when it sent a cease and desist letter to Yuriy 'Good-NDS' Krivoruchko, the developer of OpenIV, a popular Grand Theft Auto modding tool.

GTA V is one of the most beloved cross-platform games of all time. Since its original release in 1997 on PC and Playstation 1, the online community has built up into one of the largest digital communities in the world. One of the threads holding the community together is the ability to 'mod' GTA single player. Modifications are created by fans and are used to alter game content, but are not supported nor endorsed by GTA's creator, Rockstar Games.

Anyone with a computer can modify GTA, creating levels, skins, missions and more. Modding offers an entirely new way to play GTA once players have completed the original missions, and it has become one of the core offerings for the online community. Basically, everyone who is a fan of GTA is a fan of online modding, thus making Take-Two's recent C&D letter a massive "fuck you" to the global GTA community.

Take-Two (the American multinational publisher and distributor of GTA) alleged that the modding tool OpenIV "allows third parties to defeat security features of its software and modify that software in violation of Take-Two's rights." OpenIV has refuted these claims, claiming the statement "is just wrong and they know it."

Fans of the game soon found out about the C&D letter and took to the GTA V Steam page to express their discontent. It came in the form of negative reviews – about 45,000 of them. Quickly the GTA V reviews plummeted from 'mostly positive' to 'mostly negative'. The online community had spoken and Rockstar was listening. GTA's overall review rating had hit an all-time low, displaying an angry red.

What happened? The online community mobilised and took to the internet to express their discontent en masse. If this was going to go down, it wasn't going down easily. Fans were willing to put up a fight. The OpenIV Change.org petition passed its first 50,000 signature goal, and was delivered to both Rockstar Games and Take-Two Interactive.

Not much more than a week later, Rockstar reversed the decision (presumably they convinced Take-Two to back off) and issued a statement on their support page to clarify what is and isn't allowed.

"Rockstar Games believes in reasonable fan creativity, and, in particular, wants creators to showcase their passion for our games. After discussions with Take-Two, Take-Two has agreed that it generally will not take legal action against third-party projects involving Rockstar's PC games that are single-player, non-commercial, and respect the intellectual property (IP) rights of third parties."

BEST GTA MODS

VISUALV
Cleans up visuals and tweaks lighting, shadows, weather effects and all time cycles in game. Best mod overall in the scene. It was just updated to have sunny weather look like Watch Dogs 2.

WORLD OF VARIETY
Adds random events and more ambient NPCs to add more variety to the main game.

MAP EDITOR
Your wish is your command with this GTA V map editor. With the use of a free-roaming cam, you can easily place cars, ramps and even animals throughout Los Santos then hop in and play with your experiments.

MARLOWE VALLEY VINEYARD
This mod turns Marlowe Valley into a luxurious safe house that also happens to have an airport and adjacent runway. With tuning garages and parking spaces to store more than 50 cars, Marlowe Valley becomes a hide-out fit for a high roller.

MUSIC

THE RETURN OF SYNTHWAVE

SYNTHWAVE has made a comeback in recent years, thanks to a slew of nostalgic producers and film directors looking to bring back the retro sounds of the '80s. If you're a fan of TV drama Stranger Things, then you're familiar with synthwave. That gloomy, rolling synth-heavy electronic intro music was produced by Austin-based synth-pop band S U R V I V E. In a recent interview with The Vinyl Factory, the band confirmed "things are going to be a bit darker and weirder" as the characters "are going to spend a little more time in the Upside Down this season." You can read the full interview at The Vinyl Factory website, but for now, get yourself familiar with synthwave.

So what is synthwave?

You can think of it as music from the '80s that didn't actually exist back then. The origins of synthwave can be traced back to French electro house scene in the mid-2000s. It's influenced by 1980s film soundtracks, video game music and pop culture. Films like Blade Runner, The Running Man and RoboCop as well as games like F-Zero, Street Fighter and Out Run are often cited as influences of current synthwave artists.

RECORD LABELS

Many record labels are dedicated to the sound of synthwave, the most important being the French label Valerie, American label Italians Do It Better and Canadian label Rosso Corsa Records.

ARTISTS

POWER GLOVE

Most notable for making the soundtrack for the videogame Far Cry 3: Blood Dragon, the Melbourne-based duo named themselves after the Nintendo Power Glove. They sound like an '80s retro gym class; think coloured tights and leg warmers.

COM TRUISE

Com Truise, aka Seth Haley, is in a league of his own. Hailing from New York, Truise's synth-heavy tunes are arguably the closest you can come to a total Tron-like experience – and who doesn't want that?

MITCH MURDER

He's been touted as the king of the '80s revival and described as "an overworked Wall Street IT guy from the '80s who dreams at night of other realities for himself. His music is the soundtrack to those dreams." Expect clever chord progressions.

SURVIVE

S U R V I V E has adopted a purist approach to synthwave. According to The Vinyl Factory, they're "a heavily textured block of sound that at times recalls Tangerine Dream at their most cinematic, Brian Eno at his most layered, and Giorgio Moroder at his least disco."

SUPERHERO MOVIES: THE NEW WESTERNS

YOU would have to be blinder than Daredevil to have not noticed the dominance of superhero movies in cinemas these days. While some critics have bashed the major production studios for their sausage factory approach to filmmaking, the numbers don't lie. These movies are getting arses in seats the world over, commanding an impressive market share and grossing outrageous sums of money for both Marvel and DC (owned by Disney and Warner Bros, respectively).

Only 10 years ago, superhero movies grossed about US$584 million for the major studios, making up about 6 per cent of the total market share in 2007. But compare those numbers to this year's (and remember, we're only just over halfway through, with plenty more major comic book movie drawcards still to come) and superhero movies have already grossed well over a billion dollars, soaking up almost 19 per cent of the total market share.

So what's going on? Why is the global movie-going population so keen to see a nonstop stream of spandex on the big screen? Apparently, superhero movies are the new westerns. Stephen McFeely, one of the screenwriters behind Captain America: The Winter Soldier and Captain America: Civil War (both of which were well-received by fans and critics and netted about US$700 million for Marvel) put it this way:

MOVIE-GOERS WANT THEIR WESTERNS – BUT THIS TIME THE GOOD GUYS ARE WEARING CAPES INSTEAD OF PONCHOS.

"[When] you went to the movies in the '50s and '60s you went to a western. So at this point you're going to a superhero movie. It's taking over that same black hat, white hat myth-making surface. I don't have a much smarter answer than that."

But that answer is actually kind of smart. There are more than a few parallels between the popularity of westerns back in the '50s and the rise of superhero movies over the past decade or so.

After America dominated World War II and entered into a protracted nuclear standoff with Russia, filmmakers made westerns to help people escape from the complex political dramas of modern life. Why deal with the impending nuclear apocalypse when you could go back to a nostalgic era of goodies and baddies? Into a fantasy land where evil-doers end up buried six feet deep and the Clint Eastwoods of the world ride off into the sunset after winning their lady's heart.

Similarly, after the global financial crisis rocked the world in 2008, the superhero genre came into its own. That year the market share of superhero movies jumped from about 6 per cent to almost 14 per cent. There was a small lull after that but over recent years an increase in terrorist attacks, the threat of war with China or North Korea and an increasingly unstable United States has meant our yearning for escapism is back on the rise. It's the Cold War 2.0 and movie-goers want their westerns – but this time the good guys are wearing capes instead of ponchos.

TECH

SYNTHETIC LOVE TRIANGLE

PEOPLE ARE FREAKING OUT ABOUT NEW, LIFELIKE SEX DOLLS. BUT THEY'VE BEEN AROUND FOR A WHILE, SO WHAT GIVES?

INSPIRATION for this latest TECH piece didn't come easily. Inspired by the recent "Realdoll" phenomena taking place on my Facebook feed, I began to scour the internet. What are Realdolls and why are people freaking out?

As it turns out, they are anthropomorphic, artificial dolls made of silicone that are soft and anatomically correct, and are ostensibly made for sex. One particular owner made headlines after describing his creation as such: "Basically she likes to be touched. She has different modes of interaction – she has romantic, family, and sexy modes."

To be clear, he is talking about a synthetic doll. Make of it what you will.

The phenomena is not new. Sex dolls, in some form, have existed for hundreds of years. The story of Pygmalion goes: A sculptor carves a statue in the shape of a beautiful woman. It's so beautiful that he falls in love with her, prays that she could become real, has his wish granted, and lives happily ever after. Seventeenth century sailors often used cloth to fashion fornicatory dolls known as dame de voyage in French, or dama de viaje in Spanish.

From its roots in the mythical, pre-digital age to now, where large online communities, (mostly of men), who interact and share stories and photos of experiences with their dolls. From photo shoots to intimate moments – an object of intimacy, affection and love.

"Shi-chan spends 99.9% of time in my room. This is probably a good gauge of when I'm happy. Being really alone, but with her. It's a good sense of happiness.

That's a real life account from Davecat, a synthetic love activist. He continues: "A good solid happy time would be when I'm in bed with her. Not actually having sex, but just lying next to her and appreciating her. Just being able to see her looking at me regarding me, and me doing the same back; it's the difference between being alone and lonely."

That is one end of the spectrum. It is, at least in my searches, the most extreme end I could find. Falling in love, and making love with a silicone companion is bizarre to most people. But hey, whatever makes you happy. Live and let live.

But maybe I don't want a doll, and I'm bored with my hand. What are my in-between options?

You could try the Fleshlight Launch. Fleshlight have teamed up with Kiroo to create a "fully automated male masturbator." Just pop your favourite Fleshlight in and choose your setting. In manual mode, you can use its touch controls to adjust the speed, length and position of your stroke. In interactive mode, you sync The Launch to your computer or mobile via Bluetooth and opt for it to perform whatever kind of adult content floats your boat – you can even have a VR experience. The online content connected to the device includes videos, games, and webcam sessions.

"A GOOD SOLID HAPPY TIME WOULD BE WHEN I'M IN BED WITH HER. NOT ACTUALLY HAVING SEX, BUT JUST LYING NEXT TO HER AND APPRECIATING HER"

There are a lot of impressive hi-tech features on the new Launch. First of all, it's completely customisable as far as which Fleshlight you choose to lock inside the main compartment (being as it's compatible with all of them). The Launch is also compatible with the Kiiroo Onyx and Pearl, so put that in your pipe and smoke it. What we're trying to tell you is this: it's possible to buy a Fleshlight that's modelled after your favourite porn star's pussy and then sync up your Launch device with that porn star's exclusive online content. That's about as close as any of us will get to actually fucking women who would never give us the time of day.

Over 12 million Fleshlights have been sold worldwide.

HALLOWEEN HOOK UP

COVER GIRL ALYCIA HEART GETS INTO THE HALLOWEEN SPRIT

Hey Alycia! How does it feel to grace the cover of Black Label?
Exciting and surreal. This is definitely a career highlight for me.

What was it like shooting at Dracula's cabaret?
It was super fun! I'm a big fan of Dracula's - I love the shows and the venue is amazing. I really enjoyed the dark and sexy vibe this shoot has.

In the spirit of the spooky season, do you get scared easily?
Not really. I'm not much of a scaredy cat. With that being said, I've got no time for spiders.

What's your favourite scary movie?
I loved Insidious and I'm really looking forward to seeing the new IT.

Do you celebrate Halloween?
Every year I like to dress up and party. I went as a horny red devil last year. I haven't decided what I'll go as this year though but if Black Label readers have any ideas, they should follow me on social media and give me some inspiration.

What do you enjoy about roleplay?
The endless possibilities. I love dressing up and taking on new characters.

Do you have a favourite kind of roleplay scenario?
My favourite roleplays are the ones where I take on the dominant role. I love being in charge and the one who is calling the shots. Give me handcuffs, whips and chains any day. You can't hold a bad girl down (but you're welcome to try).

Is there a particular roleplay you're yet to act out but is on your bucket list?
Sex-atary... I'm good at dick-tation.

What's been the most memorable roleplay you've ever done?
Not that long ago I did a pet play where I was a puppy dog. Lots of leg humping and licking...

For some people, the idea of initiating a conversation about a roleplay (whether with a partner or an escort) might be intimidating. Do you have any tips for starting that conversation?
Use humour! When booking an escort, make sure you read the information on her website first as she will more than likely have info about the types of roleplays she enjoys and offers.

What do you do to relax?
I love spending quality time at home with my favourite vibrating friends, the Doxy and the Womanizer. You also can't wrong with some chocolate. This combo is my idea of a good night in.

Where might we find you on the weekend?
Hitting up cool cocktail bars with my sexy girlfriends.

Tell us something about you that we might not expect.
Once upon a time I was a fire-breathing burlesque dancer.

What's next for Alycia Heart?
Keep an eye out for me in the 2018 calendar and Penthouse's Little Black Book. I am loving shooting for my loyal fans… watch this space. Happy halloween lovers xxx

SACRED SKIN

ANGELINA JOLIE, CARA DELEVINGNE, MICHELLE RODRIGUEZ AND STEVEN SEAGAL ARE AMONG THE HOLLYWOOD SUPERSTARS GETTING SAK YANT – A SACRED TATTOO, INKED ON BY TRAINED MASTERS. THEY ARE BELIEVED TO CONFER A MAGICAL FORM OF PROTECTION UPON THE WEARER

BY SEAN BRUCE

IN early March this year, thousands of sacred tattoo devotees converged on Wat Bang Phra, a large Buddhist temple that sits on the outskirts of Bangkok. It's here that people who have received Sak Yant, sacred tattoos which are believed to confer upon the wearer a form of magical protection, go to have the power of their symbols restored and give thanks to the masters who provide them.

The tradition is steeped in religion, mysticism and superstition, and while Sak Yant is taken very seriously by those who follow the practice, the Thanksgiving or Wai Kru at Wat Bang Phra is hardly a solemn affair.

Under the sweltering heat of the tropical sun, tens of thousands of tattoo aficionados, both Thai and foreign, gather in the dusty courtyard outside the temple. Monks recite incantations which they believe recharge the magic contained in the ancient scripts and geometrical patterns inked on to their followers' skin. Then they blast the festival-goers with holy water, straight from a high-pressure hose. At this point, something strange happens. Worshippers and devotees go into Khong Khuen, a powerful trance-like state that causes them to lose control of their body and run in a mad dash towards the giant bronze statue of Luang Pho Poean, the late master and former head monk of Wat Bang Phra. They are possessed by the spirit of their tattoo.

"It's hot as hell, everybody's sitting down and whoever becomes possessed will rise as the presence of his tattoo fills him and will then act out the characteristics of the tattoo. The monkeys will run, the snakes will crawl, the hermit will limp along," says Tom Vater, author of Sacred Skin: Thailand's Spirit Tattoos.

For onlookers, this frenzied expression of Sak Yant's power can be intimidating. "When so many people are in a trance, and they can't control themselves, and they run towards the statue of the late monk, Luang Pho Poean – it can be scary." Says Sacred Skin photographer, Aroon Thaewchatturat. She attended the recent Wai Kru and assured me that even if it can get a little overwhelming at times, the overall atmosphere is very peaceful. Attendees have a singular focus: To pay their respects to the masters of Sak Yant.

Thai tattooing hit the mainstream after a spate of stars took up the practice. Angelina Jolie is a notable fan of the ancient art, having been by Ajarn Noo (Ajarn is a Thai term for master) early last year for the second time. Michelle Rodriguez and girlfriend Cara Delevingne also got matching Sak Yant tattoos, albeit sewn with invisible ink. And many more celebrities from Thailand and the West have followed suit.

But don't be fooled by the streams of celebrity endorsement – these tattoos have significance beyond the aesthetic. Sak Yant has its origins in India, where ancient Hindus drew yantras – a magical diagram used as a focal point during meditation – onto wood, metal, stone, cloth or whatever was available. These designs were imported into South East Asia in the 6th or 7th century where the predominately Buddhist civilisations in the area adopted them. It's not entirely clear how they made the jump from objects to skin, but one theory is that warriors would wear jackets adorned with magic symbols of protection when going into battle, but it became easier to print them straight onto the skin where the wearer could never lose them.

> ‘SAK YANT* HAS ITS ORIGINS IN INDIA, WHERE ANCIENT HINDUS DREW YANTRAS ONTO WOOD, METAL, STONE, CLOTH OR WHATEVER WAS AVAILABLE’

The process for getting a Sak Yant starts with finding a legitimate Ajarn. I was warned by Thaewchatturat that there are some less authentic practitioners than others: The guys in tattoo parlours cluttered along Khao San Road will do sacred looking tattoos, but it won't have any of the mystical properties of a Sak Yant inked on by a real Ajarn. The secret of the tattoo lies in the mantras or Katas applied by a master, not so much the ink itself. "It's easy to learn how to make those tattoos, purely as a craft," says Vater. "But to learn the Katas and all the esoteric stuff around it takes a long time. If you want to learn, you need a guru who takes you through that, who will bring you on as an apprentice and build you into an ajarn."

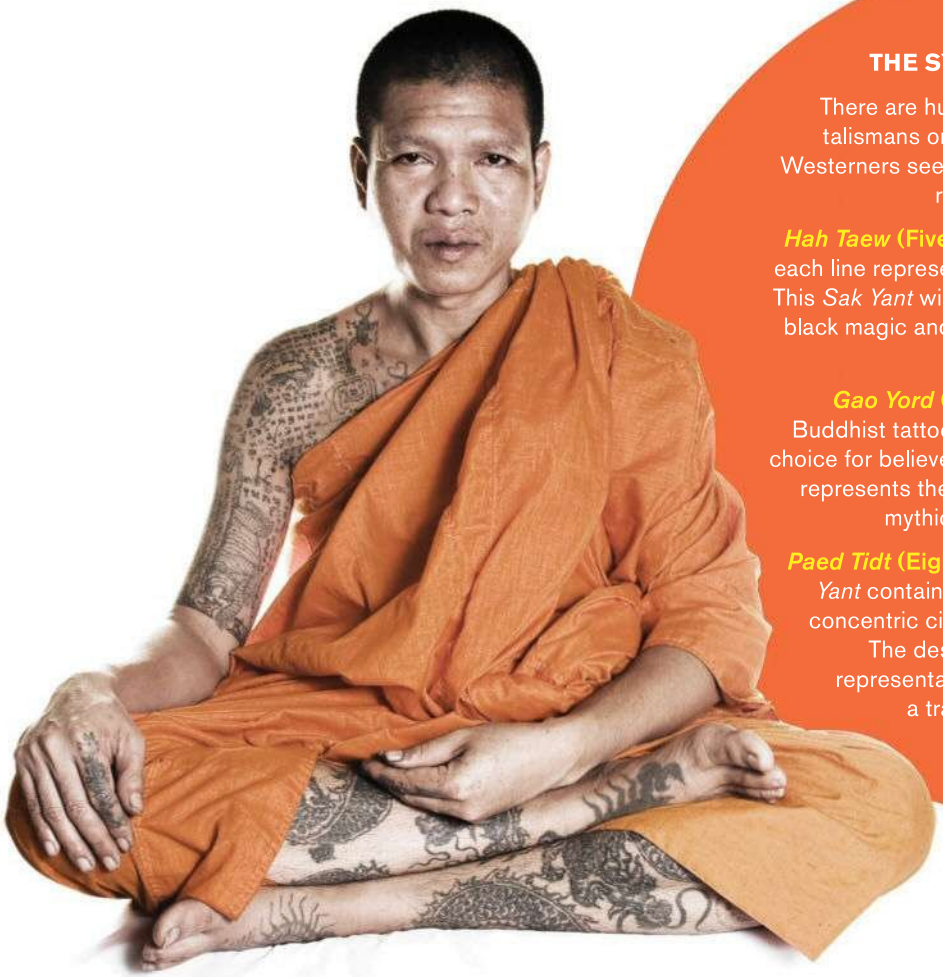

What's more, the Katas are spoken in Pali – a liturgical language for Buddhists and the script is written in Khom, which is an ancient Cambodian alphabet. A proper Ajarn will understand both of these languages as well as Thai, and be able to translate effortlessly between all three.

As part of the process, an offering is made to the old masters. A flower, a candle, incense and a pack of cigarettes is considered standard practice – along with a small donation. Getting inked by Ajarn Noo – the master who gave Jolie her Sak Yant,– requires

THE SYMBOLS OF SAK YANT

There are hundreds of potential symbols and talismans on offer from Ajarns. But 95% of Westerners seeking their first tattoo will most likely receive one of these.

Hah Taew* (Five Lines): A 700-year-old design with each line representing a different form of protection. This Sak Yant will protect against bad luck, injustice, black magic and will also make you better with the ladies. Not bad.

Gao Yord* (Nine Peaks): The most sacred Buddhist tattoo and considered a very good first choice for believers of the tradition. The basic design represents the nine peaks of Mount Meru – the mythical mountain of the gods.

Paed Tidt* (Eight Directions): A sacred Geometric Yant containing eight Mantras written in two concentric circles in the centre of the design. The design incorporates the eight representations of Buddha and protects a traveller no matter which direction they go.

more than pocket change; he reportedly charges in the thousands for his sacred designs. Otherwise, a spot with a non-celebrity ajarn can be secured for as little as $30 AUD.

While Sak Yant are becoming increasingly popular with celebrities and socialites, the practice is not exclusive to those in high society. On the contrary. "I would say it's mostly working class people and a few very, very high upper-class people because there are some aristocracy or possibly Royals who have those tattoos," says Vater. "And it's very important in that sense because in Thailand the working class has no voice in mainstream media or mainstream culture. So there's this idealisation thing going on and the farmers, factory workers and poor people have absolutely no platform in this country. So the Sak Yant is one way in which they can express themselves."

There is also a contingent of underworld figures drawn to the power of sacred tattoos.. During Vater's investigation into the world of sacred tattoos, he spoke to a number of small time gangsters, who were convinced their tattoos had bestowed upon them protection against their enemies. "One guy was telling me that he had just been in a gunfight the day before and that his adversaries had been shooting at him and he said 'the bullets were just zipping around me'. He was wearing a pair of jeans, and he said, 'Yesterday I was also wearing a pair of jeans and a couple of the bullets went right through the jeans, but they didn't touch me. And that's because of the Sak Yant'."

As a foreigner getting tattooed, it would be wise to get advice before jumping in the deep end of Sak Yant. The conservative Thai government has railed against the use of Buddhist iconography by Westerners who may not fully appreciate their significance. In the Buddhist faith, the head is viewed as the most sacred part of the body, with lower body parts such as the feet and legs considered more base. That means no tattoos of Buddha on a skateboard, and definitely no Sak Yant below the waist. Vater tells me that the Thai government have been very clear on the issue of Westerners receiving sacred tattoos. "Several years ago the Ministry of Culture published a leaflet which went to all the tattoo shops in Thailand, thousands of them, advising the tattooists not to put sacred tattoos on sensitive body parts, where it would indicate a lack of respect."

This request, it seems, has been unanimously ignored. Foreigners looking for sak yant, or any kind of tattoo, will not find it difficult to get inked in Thailand.

As Sak Yant explodes into the mainstream with more celebrities and high-flyers getting inked, I question whether the tradition can hold up against the forces of globalisation. According to Vater, the ajarns aren't worried. "I don't know if the old school guys are particularly taken aback by the impact of Western celebrities on the Sak Yant traditions. Ajarn Noo did very well out of that and all the other ajarns I know, they're all happy to tattoo foreigners. There's not one that – at least the ones that have a public profile – doesn't welcome foreigners. So I think they quite easily adapted to new circumstances and it means a better income for them, even if some of the traditional aspects are lost."

HEALTHY HIGH

HIGH-END EDIBLES

DISPENSARY

Named the best in the US by Business Insider, Caliva is San Jose's weed dispensary for the most discerning of stoners. No matter how you like to ingest your THC, these guys have it down to a fine art. From pre-rolled joints, strains of the stickiest of the icky with names like 'Pineapple OG' and 'Lemon Cookie Monster' to edibles of just about every variety and flavour, this place is a veritable supermarket for some dank, dank shit.

Originally focused on medicinal marijuana, which has been a pretty loose affair up until this point in California, Caliva will be turning its sights to some pretty hefty profits next year when weed is officially available to the public for recreational purposes. It would be easy to spend hours (and hundreds of dollars) in here getting so high you'd need a stepladder to scratch your own arse – with cheap flights on offer at the moment it sounds like it could be worth the trip to Cali for a week just to enjoy the spoils.

EDIBLES

Défoncé Chocolatier
Arguably the best-looking chocolate blocks we've ever seen, a wide range of flavours (including wacky ones like popcorn and matcha) administer safely dosed levels of THC that'll get you there. Only problem is trying not to eat the whole block before it hits.

Cheeba Chews
Chocolate toffee of the highest order. Literally. Healthy doses of medicinal Mary Jane that taste delish and have been helping Colorado residents with their weed needs since 2008. While they've been favourited by medical users for years, they're about to get a whole lot more popular in states that have legalised weed for recreational purposes.

Mountain Meds
These guys make a mean Cinnamon-Apple Pie Bar, packed full of the good stuff to have you chasing spaceships in no time. With 300mg of THC, this tastes just like a visit to Grandma's, except really, really fucking high.

Mellows
The name says it all really – medicated marshmallows in all flavours, with some kick-arse decorating for extra points. Perfect as they are or, if you're feeling creative, toast them on an open fire before you get nicely toasted yourself.

DRINK TO YOUR HEALTH

MEDICINAL SPIRITS

Fernet-Branca
Black, minty and bitter as your ex, stick it in the freezer for best results. Enjoy as you feel the icy liquid slide down your throat and ask yourself why the hell you're drinking this shit. Again. And again. Originally invented as a cure for cholera in 1845, it's solidified its place in the current marketplace by becoming the number one shot of choice among hipster bartenders.

It basically tastes like a grown-up version of Jägermeister (less sweet and without the lingering hint of regret on the finish). If you've never worried about having cholera, now's the time to start – grab a bottle and drink it on the reg just in case.

Elixir Vegetal
The rarest of the Chartreuse range of delicious liquors, this shit comes in a 100ml bottle in its own little sarcophagus and sits at a massive 69 per cent ABV. Getting your hands on any is damn near impossible so it's definitely not something to put away in one session; a teaspoon at a time to keep the doctor at bay is plenty.

Buckfast
Responsible for more teen pregnancies than the pull-out method and Errol Flynn combined, Buckfast is a tonic wine from England, although it found its popularity in Scotland where it's lovingly referred to as 'wreck the hoose juice'. Aside from alcohol, it contains more caffeine than Red Bull, making it a recipe for disaster in a teenager's hands. Fucking fun stuff though.

INTERVIEW

TIM SHARK

INTERVIEW BY JAMES MILYNN
PHOTOGRAPHER NATHAN HARMOND

ON a recent trip to Pattaya, still slightly hungover, I rolled into the downtown area of Thailand's 'Love Capital', to catch the elusive Tim 'Sharky' Ward.

I'm met by a large inked up Australian man at a downtown Pattaya gym. He finishes his last set of curls before he comes out to greet me.

He doesn't fit the archetype of people you imagine lurking in the back streets of Pattaya. Then again, he fits right in. Among the local girls, stray dogs and foreign men seeking love and fast fun, he's carved out a place for himself.

By the time we part ways I've heard some bizarre tales – some of which I can't print in these pages. But this one made it. This is for anyone thinking about heading to Thailand in search of love. In the words of Tim Shark – don't be a wood duck.

WorldMags.net

PH: What advice do you give to men coming to Pattaya or Thailand to find love?

TIM: I don't believe there is any love here. That's something you've got to understand with these girls. What I say to people is this: "I will line up 100 cocks, and you suck every cock, and then you tell me if you're normal once you get to the 100th one." You're fucked up, and these girls are fucked up. They've been doing this for so long that love is a matter of you looking after them and their family. That's as deep as it gets with these girls. It's a tragedy, and they're a tragedy, but I'm a tragedy too. Everything here is a fuck-up, including me, so that's why I think I get on so well with them. I don't bullshit them and they don't bullshit me. I have a pretty good relationship because we don't even talk about love, it doesn't even get to that. I could spend two weeks with the same girl and love won't even come into it because we're both on the same page, we know where we are. So if you're coming here looking for love, I think you're going to be bitterly disappointed.

So, should we bother moving to Pattaya?

Hell yes. I love my life. I love my relationship with my girls. For the first time in my life there is no jealousy. When I'm with a girl we have the best time. I'm a very jealous guy. If you're my girlfriend, I'm watching you 24/7. I'm going to check your phone. I want to know where you've been; I want to know why you were home late. That was me and how I acted in my relationships right up until I moved to Thailand.

Now, I don't want to be the girls' boyfriend, I actually find that it's better if my Thai girls have boyfriends because the boyfriends can do all the hard work, and then the girls come over and see me and I get the best of it – I get the easy part. The girls say, "I want to come over and see you, I just want to come over and hang out, you got some beer in the fridge?" And I'm like, "Hell yeah, come over; I've got beer in the fridge, I've got food in the fridge." And the girl will come over and I will get an anger fuck. That's a better fuck than the boyfriend's ever getting because the boyfriend doesn't get anger fucks. She comes over, she'll fuck me in a fit of rage, drink a few beers, eat some food and then she'll go home, back to this poor sorry sap who's telling her he loves her. But I will never tell her I love her, because I don't love her and she doesn't love me.

Do you think the idea of monogamy is wrong?

I don't think we are designed for it. When I go home to Australia, I'll get a Gold Coast Bulletin, and if you go to the classified section there're 500 girls selling rub and tugs, their pussies and a good time. These 500 girls are all getting clients. Who do you think the clients are? They're married men who are bored shitless with their wives, the same wife they've been stoking for the last ten years, and they're ringing these girls up. I know this for a fact because I used to look after a couple of these girls to make sure they were safe when I was back in Australia.

THAT'S A BETTER FUCK THAN THE BOYFRIEND'S EVER GETTING BECAUSE THE BOYFRIEND DOESN'T GET ANGER FUCKS. I'M THE ONE THAT'S GETTING THE ANGER FUCKS

These married men are sneaking around to get a quick one away – just to get a bit of fantasy and excitement. That's how we are as human beings. But I don't want to cheat on my partner. Imagine if you're lying to the person you're sleeping next to every night, what kind of human being are you? But now my life is so simple, I don't cheat on anyone. I don't lie to anyone, I don't deceive anyone. I am completely free. You may look at me and say, "What he's doing is wrong," but I'm not lying, I'm not cheating, and I'm not deceiving. So for the first time in my life, I'm actually free.

What's the best way to enjoy the sex scene in Pattaya?

You enjoy the girls for a short time and you don't get emotional with them. You can get to know them; you can have a good relationship with them, but don't let any emotion come into it and don't try and make them your girlfriend. Look at it as a business transaction. She comes around and you have your good time, you pay her and she leaves. There is a guy I knew who came over here from Australia looking for love. He booked a suite in The Hilton and met a bar girl. By about the third day he bought her a beautiful motorbike – it had been customised as a Hello Kitty motorbike, so it was double the price. He rode it up to The Hilton and handed her the keys. This was a girl that he was planning on spending the rest of his life with. A couple of nights later, while he was asleep, she cleaned out all his money – it was about 300,000 baht ($11,000 AUD). She took the motorbike, the spare key and she was fucking gone. So he lost the motorbike, he lost his 300,000 baht and he lost his heart because she fucking destroyed him. When you put your trust in someone like that and they deceive you so badly, it's going to destroy you. You cannot make a hoe a housewife.

How does the sex industry work in Thailand?

I probably know the girls' mindset better than anyone because I speak to them – they talk to me because we've bypassed the whole love shit, so we actually talk to each other about how it works.

The longer you've been in Pattaya, the less attractive you'll be to girls. They like the fresh guys – I call them wood ducks, because the wood duck is the easiest to extract the money out of. And if you think learning Thai is going to impress a girl, it's not – the more you try and impress a girl by speaking Thai, the more she's just going to be like "fuck this guy." The dopier you act, the more attractive you will be to the girls. Act dopey, act stupid, act like a wood duck, but don't be a wood duck.

The girls like the gullible guys, the goofy guys, the guys they think they can extract the most money out of because these girls are not looking for love. They will tell you they are looking for love but they are looking for financial gain. So act stupid, but don't be stupid. That's the best advice I can give.

So you think a lot of Westerners come over here with the wrong idea?

Yes. The other misconception that Western people have is that these poor girls need to be saved. I call these guys 'Captain Save-A-Hoe.'

They come into town with their big money, and their big dreams and they're like, "Honey, I will save you." She doesn't want to be saved.

THE OTHER MISCONCEPTION THAT WESTERN PEOPLE HAVE IS THAT THESE POOR GIRLS NEED TO BE SAVED. AND YOU KNOW, I CALL THESE GUYS 'CAPTAIN SAVE-A-HOE'

I'll tell you a story to give you an idea of how this is: One of the girls that I have looked after in the past now has a Thai boyfriend who sells a bit of marijuana. That's how he makes his living – he sells a bit of grass down on the beach. They've got a hammock strung between two coconut trees and this is their home. He sells a bit of marijuana, she sells her pussy, and they have a perfect relationship. They sit on the ground, they eat their som tum and at night time they buy their Leo beers. They're happy.

An American guy comes along – Captain Save-a-Hoe, and he falls for this beautiful girl. He was taking her for a short time, and actually fell for her. He lives in a beautiful apartment building; he has the widescreen TV, he's a share trader, so he has plenty of money and he can practically do anything he wants in the world. He says to her, "I want you to move in with me."

She went back to her boyfriend on the beach and said, "Oh, falung (foreigner) want me to move in… what do I do?"

"How much is he going to pay?" This is the first thing the boyfriend asks.

He was going to give her 40,000 baht a month ($1,500 AUD). He said: "Go, go, I'll take half that. You can bring half of that down to me and drop it in my hammock here on the beach."

She went and lived with this American guy. She lasted two weeks. In two weeks' time, she was back on the beach, in the hammock, eating her som tum with the Thai guy who has no ambition. His dream is to be in the hammock with a bottle of beer, on the beach.

Mr American took the girl to his fancy condo, showed her the widescreen TV, tried to get her to watch movies like Titanic and get her interested in share trading, by explaining the American share market to her. Her brain just exploded. Her fucking brain just exploded and she basically ran out. She grabbed her clothes and ran back down to the beach and jumped into the hammock and cuddled up next to her drug-dealing boyfriend.

They are so simple. The more complex you make it for them, the more you'll scare them off. You know, they just want simple. They just want to squat on the ground and eat their som tum and lay in their hammock. And the more complex we try and make it for them, the less they will enjoy it. So that's an example of the mindset of these girls. You know what, it's like they don't learn what we learn and they don't want to. They don't want to know about foreign affairs and politics, they don't want any of that. They just want to know that there's a hammock between a couple of coconut trees that they can go lie in.

I love Halloween. Being able to dress up has always been a form of escapism for me. The time of year has never stopped me from doing that but Halloween is the perfect time to play with others. I have a history of letting go of my inhibitions, but Halloween is just another excuse for everybody else to do the same. Some people are like that, you know? They need a good reason to let go.

I don't blame them. I just REALLY like to enjoy their company at those occasions when they do. I was at a house party. I'm blessed with the kind of friends who know how to have a good time when it counts. The house was packed. Some people I already knew and plenty I hadn't had the pleasure of meeting yet. I didn't mind. I love making new friends and the crowd was pretty damn sexy. It was a mixed crew.

Some were people I knew through work, similarly open minded and dressed to kill. Then there were friends of friends, a little more straight laced and looking deliciously corruptible.

Currently I was balancing a tray of drinks on one hand whilst trying to push my way through a very crowded hallway. On my travels, I'd passed four naughty nurses, a guy in a panda costume and someone who I think was a pirate, but had already managed to lose most of their clothes. Things were kicking off just the way I liked and I could tell that this evening had a lot of potential. I'm not saying I went in with plans… but I had indulged in a little wishful thinking.

The drinks I was carrying were for a particular group who I had plenty of unfinished business with from last year's event. I had a sneaking suspicion we all shared the same cautious optimism for how this evening might pan out.

I made it to my destination. Kicking the door to the spare bedroom open, I sidled inside and nudged it closed behind me with my butt. I was dressed in one of my favourite costumes. Velma, from the old school Scooby Doo cartoons. I always had a sneaking suspicion that nerdy girls had the most fun. I mean, I was an unabashed geek and I got up to all sorts of things. But no-one can tell me that a girl in a short red skirt doesn't have a few secrets to tell.

> "I RUN MY TONGUE ALL THE WAY UP HER PUSSY TO HER CLIT, LETTING OUT A SOFT MOAN AS I TASTE HER JUICES"

I distributed drinks to my companions, who in my absence had already started to reacquaint themselves. There was one particularly naughty Kitty Cat, nuzzling her face in to the neck of very receptive Lara Croft. Seated close by watching was Captain America who gave me a cheeky wink as I pushed my glasses, already fogging up a little, back up my nose. I licked my lips. Funnily enough I think it was Lara doing all the purring as Kitty pushed her on her back on the bed they'd been sitting on and straddled her hips.

I slunk forward, eager to get closer and my head fell to the side as the Captain pressed up against me from behind watching over my shoulder as his lips fell to my neck, sucking and occasionally nipping at my ear. "Distracted are we?" He murmured as I mumbled something in response. Kitty and Lara had started to kiss, long and slow. Their hands wandered, sliding under costumes, pulling at zippers and clasps, but too distracted to finish their tasks.

"How about we help them?" I turned slightly, raising an eyebrow at Captain and giving him a cheeky grin. He laughed quietly and nodded "Ladies first…"

I crawled over to the two women, propping myself up behind Kitty, over Lara's legs and unzipping the back of her catsuit slowly. She arched up a little, turning her face and giving me with a look. I leant up and captured her lips with mine.

She hummed delightedly, doing an impressive job of caressing Lara's nipples beneath her tight tight blue tank top, whilst keeping my lips very well occupied.

Captain had slid over to us, making fast work of the holsters and straps preventing Lara from removing her top. He kept moving close, as if to kiss her - then darting away at the last minute, causing Lara to growl "Tease" as she writhed beneath Kitty and myself.

Rolling off the bed (and Lara) I took Kitty's hand and pulled her to her feet. Now she was standing, I could push the catsuit down the length of her body. It fit like a second skin (latex will do that) and I was delighted to find that, like me, she'd chosen to forgo underwear this evening. I dropped to my knees and pushed the suit down her legs to the floor. She stepped out of it neatly and I snaked my hands up her legs slowly. Sitting up on my knees I pressed my lips to her inner thighs, making my way up, up, up…

WorldMags.net

She shivers as the tip of my tongue traces over the delicate skin I find at the apex of her thighs. I'm teasing. Just enough pressure to be present, but not too much, not just yet. "Lucie…." She sighs, letting her hands run through my hair and tugging, just a little, so that my gaze travels upwards. I flatten my tongue and run it all the way up her pussy to her clit, letting out a soft moan as I taste the sweet tang of her juices. She's wet. Taking things slowly gave her plenty of time to get lost in each sensation. It's gotten me more more than a little worked up myself.

I work my hands up the back of her thighs and dig my nails, just lightly, into her firm butt. She's deliciously toned and her skin is so soft - I'm revelling in getting to know her body properly and I luxuriate in every moan and soft sigh that slips from her mouth. Running the tip of my tongue in small circles around her clit, I make her wait some more. I'm enjoying feel her muscles twitch and the way her grip on my hair gets tighter, her back aching as she grinds her hips and tries to pull me even closer to her. I'm not that cruel - I start kiss, lick and suck more firmly, feeling her body throb and her juices flow even more freely now. I'm an oral enthusiast, so I don't hold back now. She's sweet to taste and I can feel her legs starting to shake as she gets closer and closer to the edge.

I manage to nudge her closer to the bed, pushing her down on to her back. I stay on my knees, face buried between her thighs - not that I could move, her hands are gripping my hair, pushing my hard against her body. I'm happy to be there. I have no intention of moving until I've seen this through. She's crying out now, high pitched moans mixed with utterly filthy language. I love it. Talking dirty is best in the heat of the moment. I'm not sure she has any idea what she's saying, but it's hot as hell hearing her voice break as she starts to lose herself to pleasure entirely. My tongue has dipped down and it's plunging inside her - it's so hot! Her whole body is trembling and my hands are at her waist, holding her steady so I can continue. I feel her muscles contract and she lets out one loud gasp. I pull alway briefly and return my attention to her clit, my tongue rolling over it in time with the motions of her hips.

Our hands tighten their grip on each other just as the orgasm she's been waiting for hits and I'm rewarded with the clench of her thighs and a rush of warmth. She's almost impossibly slick now and I take the time to gently bathe her pussy with my tongue, taking a moment to taste as she catches her breath.

When I rise up I'm a mess. Hair everywhere and my face red and flushed, but grinning all the same. "Yum." I poke my tongue out as Kitty laughs and pulls me up to lie alongside her. We indulge in another kiss, long and slow. She can taste herself on me and I know, like me, she loves it. Great and dirty minds often think alike.

We're interrupted by a low moan to our left and notice that the Captain and Lara have kept themselves well occupied in our absence.

Both have managed to lose their costumes entirely and Lara has found herself a comfortable seat, grinding slowly on the good Captain's cock. He has his head titled back, hands clenched in the bedding - she's taking her sweet time - a woman after my own heart!

Lara pauses for a moment, pointing at me. "You're the odd one out 'Velma!" I'm being scolded. I realise that I'm the only one still in costume.

Normally I'm the first with my clothes off, but my attentions have, understandably, been elsewhere.

"She's right." The Captain has managed to relocate his voice. "And I've got somewhere else for you to sit." He licks his lips and gives me a sly wink. I shiver. He's very suggestible. They all are. And who am I to disagree? Kitty stands, pulling me to my feet, her hands already seeking out the zip on my skirt. "Allow me to help…"

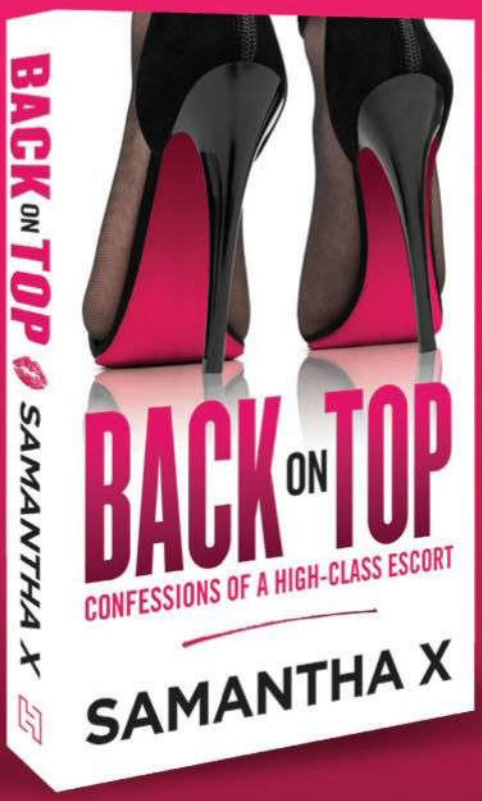

Did I mention I love Halloween?
